FUND COMMENTARY

July was an eventful month politically and economically. In politics, Democrats chose to replace Joe Biden in the presidential race against Donald Trump who, meanwhile, was the subject of an assassination attempt. On the economic front, June inflation came in lower than expected. Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell hinted at potential rate cuts before reaching the 2% target, leading markets to anticipate a cut as early as September. It is worth mentioning that our investment strategy remains apolitical, focusing on fundamentals and building a resilient portfolio of companies that can consistently grow earnings through diverse economic and political cycles.

During the month, Johnson & Johnson and Cintas were among the contributors to portfolio performance. Johnson & Johnson reported robust results, with pharmaceutical sales exceeding expectations, driven primarily by a strong performance in oncology. In MedTech, the company's orthopaedics division saw accelerating revenue growth thanks to its robotic platform, while innovation momentum benefitted the cardiovascular segment. Cintas also delivered strong results, with earnings surpassing market expectations. The company continues to convert new clients to its uniform rental programmes while also increasing the cross-selling of related products, demonstrating the significant market opportunities ahead.

Among the detractors from performance this month were Eli Lilly and Microsoft. Both companies were affected by a style rotation away from longer-duration and large capitalisation stocks. Eli Lilly faced additional volatility due to positive results in drugs under development by certain competitors. Despite weaker share prices in July, there were no fundamental changes in these companies.

Despite the short-term market movements, we remain focused on companies that are well protected from competition and capable of delivering above-average earnings growth and returns on capital over the long run, and which we buy when we detect a discount to their intrinsic value. We are confident that our portfolio is well positioned with respect to these criteria.
